HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF SITES

TAXILA CITY

- Taxila, a significant city in ancient South Asia, along the eastern bank of the Indus River
- In the 19th century, archaeologist Sir Alexander Cunningham rediscovered Taxila's ruins. In 1980, the site was granted UNESCO World Heritage status

Jaulian Monastery, Taxila

Jaulian, constructed by the Kushans in the 2nd century, served as an ancient university, contemporaneous with nearby Mohra Muradu. The invasion of the White Huns in the 450s CE led to the ruin of Jaulian and Ancient Taxila, eventually causing abandonment

CITY OF SIRKAP, TAXILA

- The creation of Sirkap is attributed to Greco-Bactrian ruler Demetrius following his conquest of ancient India circa 180 BC
- Sirkap's reconstruction is also attributed to King Menander I
- The city was designed using the "Hippodamian" grid pattern characteristic of Greek urban planning

BHAMALA STUPA, TAXILA

- The Bhamala Stupa, an ancient Buddhist marvel, holds its ground as a National Heritage Site, tracing back to the venerable 2nd. Century
- Nestled within the expanse of the Bhamala Buddhist Complex, the stupa weaves history, culture, and architecture into a tapestry of yesteryears along the tranquil riverbank.

DHARMARAJIKA STUPA, TAXILA

- The stupa's origin dates back to the 2nd century CE during the Kushan period. Its purpose was to enshrine Buddha's relics. Buddhist records mention the use of frankincense in rituals at Dharma Rajika, while the complex was adorned with vibrant glass tiles.
- Debate revolves around the possibility that the Dharmarajika Stupa was erected atop the remains of an older stupa crafted by Mauryan Emperor King Ashoka in the 3rd century BCE. Yet, differing perspectives among archaeologists challenge this notion

SHINGARDAR STUPA, SWAT

- Situated in the hamlet of Shingardar. Its origins trace to King Uttarasena, a historical figure of Swat Valley, who erected this stupa to safeguard his portion of Buddha's relics
- While enroute to Mingora, a Buddha statue sculpted within a rock greets travelers, a silent sentinel of history
